LEGAL MORALITY. Mr. Just as Coleridge, who bears a great name in the judicial roll of England, has been recently promoted from the Court of Queen's Bench to her Majesty's Privy Council. On leaving a sest which he adorned and made useful to his country and the whole world for forty years, he was favored by an address from the Attorney General, expressive of the gratitude and congratulation of the members of the bar. He replied in some appropriate remarks, instinct with the deepest emotion. In the course of them he took occasion to address a few words of advice to the younger members, which deserve attention everywhere. Referring to crises making unusual demands upon the profession be remarked, "these are not your severest trials." He continued: They are those which are most insidious, which beset you in the ordinary path of your daily duty, those which spring from the excitement of contest, from the love of intellectual display, and even from an exaggerated sense of duty to your clients.

"Gentlemen, especially my younger friends, suffer me without offence, to put you on your guard against these. We can well afford to bear aditional pleasantres upon us from without, but we cannot afford that underlying these there should exist among thoughtful persons a feeling that our professional standard of honor is questionable-that we, as advocates, will say and do in Court what we, as gentlemen, would scorn to do in the common walks of life. Sometimes, I confess it seems to me that we lend support to such a feeling by the lightness with which we impute ungenerous conduct or practices to each other. Surely no case is so sacred, no client so dear, that ever an advocate should be called upon to barter his own self-respect. If that be our duty, our great and glorious profession is no calling for a gentle-

This contrasts admirably with the doctrine of Lord Brougham, that the lawyer should knew nobody but his client, and no interest but his client's interest-a declaration which has exerted much mischief among the members, especially the younger members, of the legal profession. Mr. Justice Coleridge's authority, as that of a more experienced and sound lawyer, is better than that of Lord of duty. If the lawyer is to have a special morelity for his guidance in Court. the physician may claim a like favor among his patients, the merchant in his counting room, the mechanic in his work shop, every man in his special vocation, and the plain moral ity of the Bible will be left almost wholly to women and children. The lawyer undoubedly is to give his client the utmost benefit of his learning, his talents, and his skill, but no fee retains his conscience and his self-respect. Heary Ward Beecher said the other day that "he was a man before he was a minister;" it is the pride of the honorable lawyer, to remember, not only that he was a man before he was a lawyer, but that he is a man all the while. No man bas a right to swerve from the duties which he owes to all his fellow men and to bimself. And we hope this testimony to simple truth from so eminent a lawyer as Mr. Justice Coleridge, will have its deserved influence, in this country especially.

AN INDEPENDENT NIGGER.

In his repent abolition speech, Lord Brougham related the following anecdote: "Lord Lyndhurst gave mea short time since an anecdote of a gentleman who was cor. nected with the Hague, and who, on one occasion, received an invitation to the house of a Cuban gentleman, a negro proprietor of a utmost hospitality and treated elegantly. He said be was rather entertained when, after dinner was over, his colored host said that he was a man without any prejudice whatever, and that whenever be found a person bonest honorable, and respectable in every point of view, he held out the hand of fellowship to bim, even though his color were as white as that table-cloth."

A LITTLE OF BOTH WANTED. There are two kinds of girls. One is the kind that appears best abroad-the girls that are good for parties, rides, visits, balle, &c., and whose chief delight is in such thinge; the other is the kind that appears best at home-the girls that are useful and cheerful in the dining-room, the sick room, and all the precents of home. One is often a torment at home; the other is a blessing -One is a moth, consuming everything about ber; the other is a sunbeam, inspiring life and gladness all along her pathway. Now it does not necessarily follow that there shall be two classes of girls. The right education will modify both a little, and unite their characters in one
